The FOSSCOMM

FOSSCOMM is an annual conference that celebrates the vibrant FOSS community in Greece. Organized entirely by volunteers, this event brings together developers, enthusiasts, and advocates to share their knowledge, showcase their projects, and explore the latest trends in the world of open-source technology.

Attendees have the opportunity to immerse themselves in insightful presentations and workshops led by esteemed FOSS experts. They can engage in hands-on tutorials and coding sessions to enhance their skills, connect with a diverse network of FOSS users, contributors, and leaders, and explore cutting-edge open-source projects that are shaping the digital landscape.

FOSSCOMM is more than just a conference it's a celebration of the collaborative spirit that drives the FOSS community.

FOSSCOMM's 2025 location

This year, FOSSCOMM sets sail for the island of Samos, bringing open-source technology and innovation to a place where history and natural beauty meet. The event is organized in collaboration with the University of the Aegean, FossAegean and the Open Technologies Alliance (GFOSS).

FOSSCOMM 2025 aims to transform Samos into a vibrant hub for open technologies, where developers, students, researchers, and entrepreneurs come together to share knowledge. From open data and AI to sustainability and education, the conference invites you to be part of a community shaping tomorrow.

University of the Aegean

The Department of Information and Communication Systems Engineering at the University of the Aegean, established in 1997, is located on the island of Samos, renowned as the birthplace of the ancient mathematician Pythagoras. As part of the polytechnic group of schools at the university, the department contributes to the university's emphasis on engineering and technological education.
